Understanding allied health professionals’ attitudes to tele-health

Associate Professor Jennifer Tieman
Palliative and Supportive Services
Email: jennifer.tieman@flinders.edu.au

Dr Christopher Lind
Speech Pathology and Audiology
Email: christopher.lind@flinders.edu.au

Brief outline of project
Technology is changing how health consumers and how health professionals view and engage with health care delivery. New technologies are helping patients and their families to manage their conditions and to engage with health professionals in new ways through videoconferencing, email and SMS. These technologies are of particular significance for people with reduced mobility and those who live at some distance from their health care providers. However, there are challenges in implementing telehealth and in managing change processes. This study will examine attitudes of allied health professionals towards telehealth and their current familiarity with and use of new technologies in health

Key references

Location of Project:
Repatriation General Hospital, Daw Park