Entry requirements

- Minimum PGY1+
- Hold Australian citizenship/permanent residency status/temporary residency on a case-by-case basis
- Australian Medical Council (AMC) recognised medical qualification.
- Applicants are required to hold general medical registration without conditions or undertakings by the commencement of training

How to Apply

To apply for a general practice training place, contact RACGP directly. The application process includes assessments and interviews to ensure that you have the applicable skills and knowledge and attendance to succeed in your training towards fellowship.

Total Training Time

The AGPT program is a three-year, full-time (or part-time equivalent) program. If you're doing rural generalist training, this increases to a four year full-time (or part-time equivalent) program. These are minimum program times.

- Year 1: training is delivered within a hospital setting including clinical rotations relevant to general practice.
- Years 2-3: 3 x 6-month general practice terms working in a clinic and seeing patients. 1 x 6-months extended skills term (for example palliative care, sports medicine, sexual health and skin cancer medicine).

- Year 4 (optional): undertaking additional rural skills training towards a RACGP Rural Generalist Fellowship (FARGP).

NT Rural Generalist and General Practice Training Pathways

RACGP's Rural Generalist (RG) Fellowship is awarded in addition to the vocational Fellowship of the RACGP (FRACGP). It aims to develop additional rural skills and broaden options for safe, accessible and comprehensive care for Australia's rural, remote and very remote communities. If you're working towards the Rural Generalist Fellowship, you'll do 52 weeks of additional rural skills training (ARST) in an accredited training post. You have up to six years to complete the requirements and achieve dual RACGP fellowship (FRACGP, FRACGP-RG).
